How much can you deduct for the used goods you gave to charity last year? The IRS allows you to deduct the fair market value of an item - that is the price it would sell for in a thrift or resale shop. The quality of the item when new, as well as its age and present condition, must be taken into account.

On the following page there is a worksheet with approximate values of items currently selling at thrift shops. For items not on the list the Salvation Army suggests taking 25% to 30% of the items original price as its fair market value. Use this sheet for each separate time you donated items. Feel free to make copies for each charity.
